According to the knowledge base, what three distinct funding pathways should be assessed separately in an energy project?

The three funding pathways are grants (requiring assessment of applicant/project eligibility, round, deadline, eligible expenditure, and approval conditions), certificates (requiring assessment of activity eligibility, evidence, quantity, ownership, sale terms and price timing), and finance (requiring assessment of borrower and project terms, repayments, security, fees and conditions).

Why should grants, certificates, and finance be treated separately in a project file or business case?

Because grants, certificates and finance are not the same thing—each has distinct eligibility criteria, assessment requirements and documentation needs, so they should appear separately in the project file and business case.

What is a Funding Status Register and what should it track?

A Funding Status Register is a tool organizations should maintain to systematically track funding opportunities, recording the exact programme and round, source URL, date checked, application status (discovered, assessed, applied, conditionally approved, approved, paid), and next action. For certificates specifically, it should distinguish eligible-in-principle, calculated, submitted, issued, and sold stages.

Why is it important to keep project merit separate from funding eligibility?

Because a worthwhile project may exist without conditional financial support, and programme eligibility does not establish that equipment is appropriate or economically attractive—so project merit and funding eligibility should be assessed independently.
