What articles are listed on the Northmore Gordon Grants tag page?

The page lists three items: 'Government Grants/ Program to Know About – September 2026 Update (Australia)' (dated May 1, 2026), 'Don't miss out on Energy Grants – Secure funding for your business' (dated February 12, 2025), and 'November Update' (a newsletter dated November 1, 2017).

Where can I find the article about government grants and programs for Australia?

It's linked from the Grants tag page under the title 'Government Grants/ Program to Know About – September 2026 Update (Australia)', located at </articles/government-grants-update-australia/>.

Is there an article about securing funding for energy grants for businesses?

Yes, titled 'Don't miss out on Energy Grants – Secure funding for your business', published February 12, 2025, and found at </articles/dont-miss-out-on-energy-grants-secure-funding-for-your-business/>.

What should be established before relying on a grant for a project, according to Northmore Gordon's knowledge base?

Before relying on a grant, you must establish applicant eligibility (whether your organization qualifies), project eligibility (whether the specific project meets requirements), the round and deadline, eligible expenditure (what costs the grant covers), and the approval and payment conditions needed to receive and keep the funding.

What tool can help find grant opportunities in Australia?

The Australian Government Grants Finder is a useful starting point for discovering grant opportunities by location, purpose and status, though finding a listing does not mean applications are currently open.

How should businesses track their progress with grant applications?

By using a funding status register that records the exact programme and round, the source URL where the opportunity was found, the date checked, the current application status (discovered, assessed, applied, conditionally approved, approved, or paid), and the next action to take.

Should grants be combined with other funding types like certificates or financing?

Grants, certificates, and financing are different forms of support and should appear separately in a project file and business case; compatibility restrictions in each programme should be checked carefully before combining multiple support streams.

How should a business present an investment decision that includes grant funding?

The project should be presented both with and without the grant funding, which helps management understand the decision and identify the point at which the plan would need to be revisited if support is delayed, reduced, or unavailable.
